PREFACE

This Index is a cumulation, for the years 1900 to 1910 inclusive, of the Index to General Literature which appeared annually in the Annual Library (Literary) Index. In addition, 125 books published between the above dates are here analyzed for the first time in print through the co-operation of the following libraries: the Chicago Public Library, the Cleveland Public Library, the Cincinnati Public Library, the Carnegie Library of Pittsburgh, the Grand Rapids Public Library, the John Crerar Library and the Minneapolis Public Library.

An arrangement strictly by subject, rather than by catch-word, might be preferable, but with the material to be compiled it has been necessary to follow the old arrangement. For convenience in use allied subjects have been brought together under one heading whenever it seemed practicable; for example, the material which in the annual volumes appeared under the headings Aeronautics, Aviation, Airships and Flying machines has here been combined under the one subject Aeronautics. Where entries have been transferred cross-references have been made.

It has been impossible to verify entries in the cumulated material, therefore the Index of necessity contains any typographical or other errors which the yearly compilations may have contained. All mistakes detected, however, have been rectified and many inconsistencies eliminated. The abbreviations of books differed from year to year, but since all these seemed clear, no change of form has been made. The use of both singular and plural entries for subjects has been avoided and all grouped under one, wherever the meaning permitted. The colon abbreviations for proper names were not followed consistently in the yearly Indexes, so they have not been used in the present volume. An effort has been made not to repeat the subject heading more than necessary, in order to avoid a page too black in appearance. Also the grouping of entries in one alphabet more than in the former edition has prevented some needless repetition. The sense has in some cases changed the arrangement but clearness of meaning has always been held uppermost. One dash is used to indicate the repetition of subject wherever this idea of clearness permitted, even though the subject itself consisted of more than one word. In some cases, as in the subject Power, the different meanings of the term seem to be clear, and so all are grouped as one subject.

It is hoped that the method of printing the list of books analyzed with ample space for the library call numbers will prove of material assistance. The book has been printed on extra strong paper in the hope that it will better withstand the severe usage to which reference books are subjected.

The Publishing Board gratefully acknowledge the permission, freely and willingly given, of the R. R. Bowker Company, of New York, to cumulate for the purposes of this volume material from their annual Indexes 1900 to 1910 inclusive, and they desire hereby to record their sincere appreciation of this courtesy. To the various libraries, previously named, through whose co-operative labors the analyzing of 125 books has been accomplished, most hearty thanks are due. Particularly appreciative mention must be made of the service rendered by Miss Carrie L. Elliott, reference librarian of the Chicago Public Library, who has greatly assisted the secretary of the American Library Association in the selection of books for analysis, and by helpful advice throughout the preparation of the work.

The task of cumulating, arranging, editing and proof-reading the material here assembled has been performed by Mrs. Earl N. Manchester (née Alice Amelia Wood), formerly of the University of Chicago Library.
